Winter's on the way

Clouds swirling over the snow-covered peaks of Mt. Timpanogos paint a picture of things to come as Utahns brace for winter. A disturbance moving through northern Utah Wednesday morning dropped a few flakes of snow. The average day of first measurable snow at the Salt Lake International Airport is Nov. 9, and it could come on schedule. Forecasters say a big change to wintry weather is on track for the weekend, with temperatures cold enough for some snow accumulations in the valleys and substantial amounts in the mountains. Skies will be mostly cloudy Wednesday night and Thursday, with only a 20 percent chance of precipitation along the Wasatch Front. Highs will be from the mid-50s to low 60s Thursday. Lows will be in the upper 20s and low 30s. A low of 35 early Wednesday gave Salt Lake City its 221st consecutive frost-free day.
